DEVELOPMENT IN THE TYPOLOGICAL STRUCTURE THE MUSEUM BUILDINGS

Abstract:

Public buildings are architectural works serving the social, household and spiritual needs of human society. Their spaces are an environment for diverse public relations and activities. That is why all significant changes in society reflect the spatial structure of the respective public buildings. Often architectural creativity overtakes changes in society and thus becomes a catalyst for new social relationships.

A priority in the typological development of public buildings is the art and cultural buildings. Namely, they most define the architectural, artistic, spatial and structural-functional character of the subsequent types of public buildings. The structural analysis of symbolic museum buildings of the last two centuries will identify the directions of past structural transformations and will identify possible directions for future development in spatial and typological metamorphoses.

Keywords:

Public Buildings, Museum, Typology, Special Structure.
